3. The remainder of the briefing was taken up by questions from the Chairman. Mr. Solarz sought additional information about the NPA, the prospect for reforms in the political/economic system under President Marcos, the likely results of any reduction in US aid, the chances of a coup aimed at overthrowing Marcos, and reactions in China, the USSR, and Asian countries to growing instability in the Philippines. The briefers discussed the trends and events leading to the present situation and the special tactical skills that have enabled Marcos to hold on to the presidency despite his ill health and growing opposition. They also discussed attitudes among the Filipino people and the military toward the regime. [redacted]

4. At the end of this exchange, Mr. Solarz stated that he found the briefers' responses "very vague" and "not up to the standards of the past." He indicated that Administration policy did not seem to be nudging Marcos toward a restoration of democratic institutions. Mr. Solarz asked INR to prepare a list of "levers" that the US could use to apply pressure on the Marcos government with the aim of curtailing corruption and establishing a more representative system. There were no tasks levied on the Agency.
